'This is a refreshing and innovative account of the formation of different types of consciousness among Muslims in Britain and globally. Nasar Meer's lucid analysis of the complex processes at work is a timely reminder of the dangers of an over-simplified understanding of both Islam and Muslim communities. This is a book that deserves the widest possible readership' - John Solomos, Professor of Sociology, City University London, UK

'important, timely and thought-provoking' - Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies

'This book should be recommended not only to scholars working on British Muslims but to all readers interested in the changing cultural borders of Europe.' - The European Legacy: Towards New Paradigms

'There is little question that the theories put forward have significantly advanced the arguments for plurality, multiculturalism, and mutual understanding.' - Nations and Nationalism

About the book

In order to understand current trends in the adoption and espousal of Muslim identities in Britain, not only is it necessary to obtain a historical understanding of their development through British approaches to minority integration. It is also necessary to look at forms of 'consciousness' that are informing and shaping the assertion of Muslim identities in Britain, and what this can tell us about their future orientation. This book develops a novel sociological and political understanding of Muslim identities in Britain, which is elaborated through case studies of Muslim mobilizations over issues of education, discrimination legislation, media representation, as well as a consideration of the local impact of global concerns surrounding issues of terrorism and Muslim radicalism.
